Today is Friday. Sam and Bloop are involved in a school activity on the environment. They are giving a presentation on how important water is in our lives. They have been preparing for a month. Parents are invited to school to see the students' work.

Sam and Bloop can't wait to show their work. But Bloop is looking for his schoolbag... They are going to be late!

"I'll see you at the bus stop!" says Sam.

A few minutes later, Bloop finally finds his schoolbag and runs all the way to the bus stop. Too late. The bus left without him.

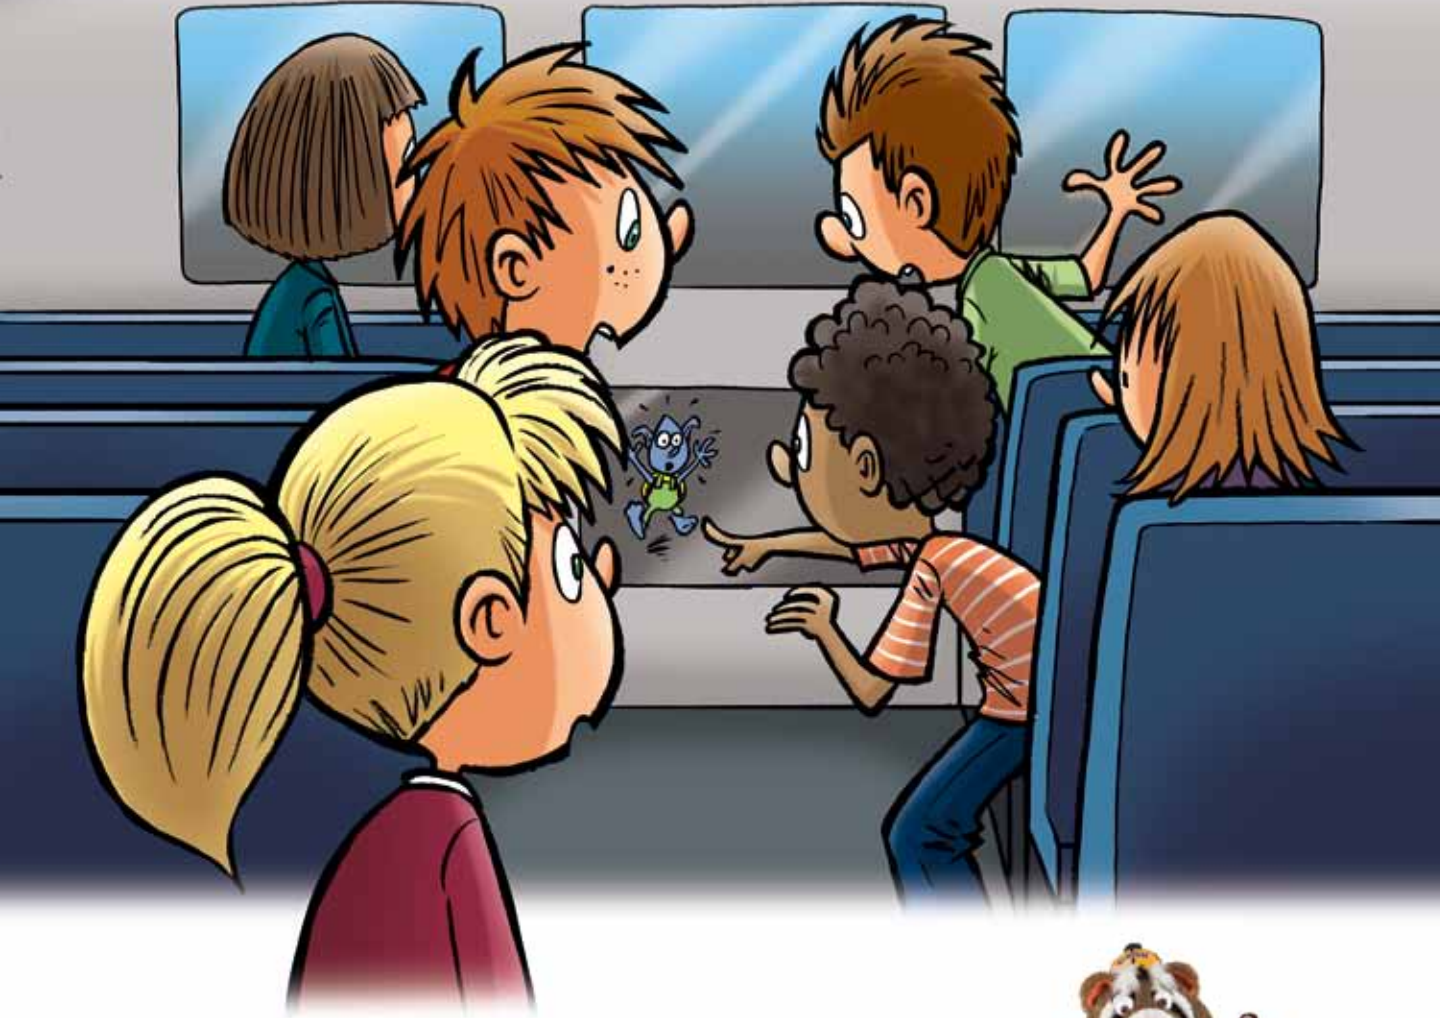

*Bloop made a very careless mistake.
What safety rules did he forget?*

Turn to page 12 for the answer.

Sitting on the back seat, Sam sees Bloop in the distance, running recklessly behind the bus.

"Bloop!" he cries out, alarming the other students, who suddenly all rush to the back of the bus.

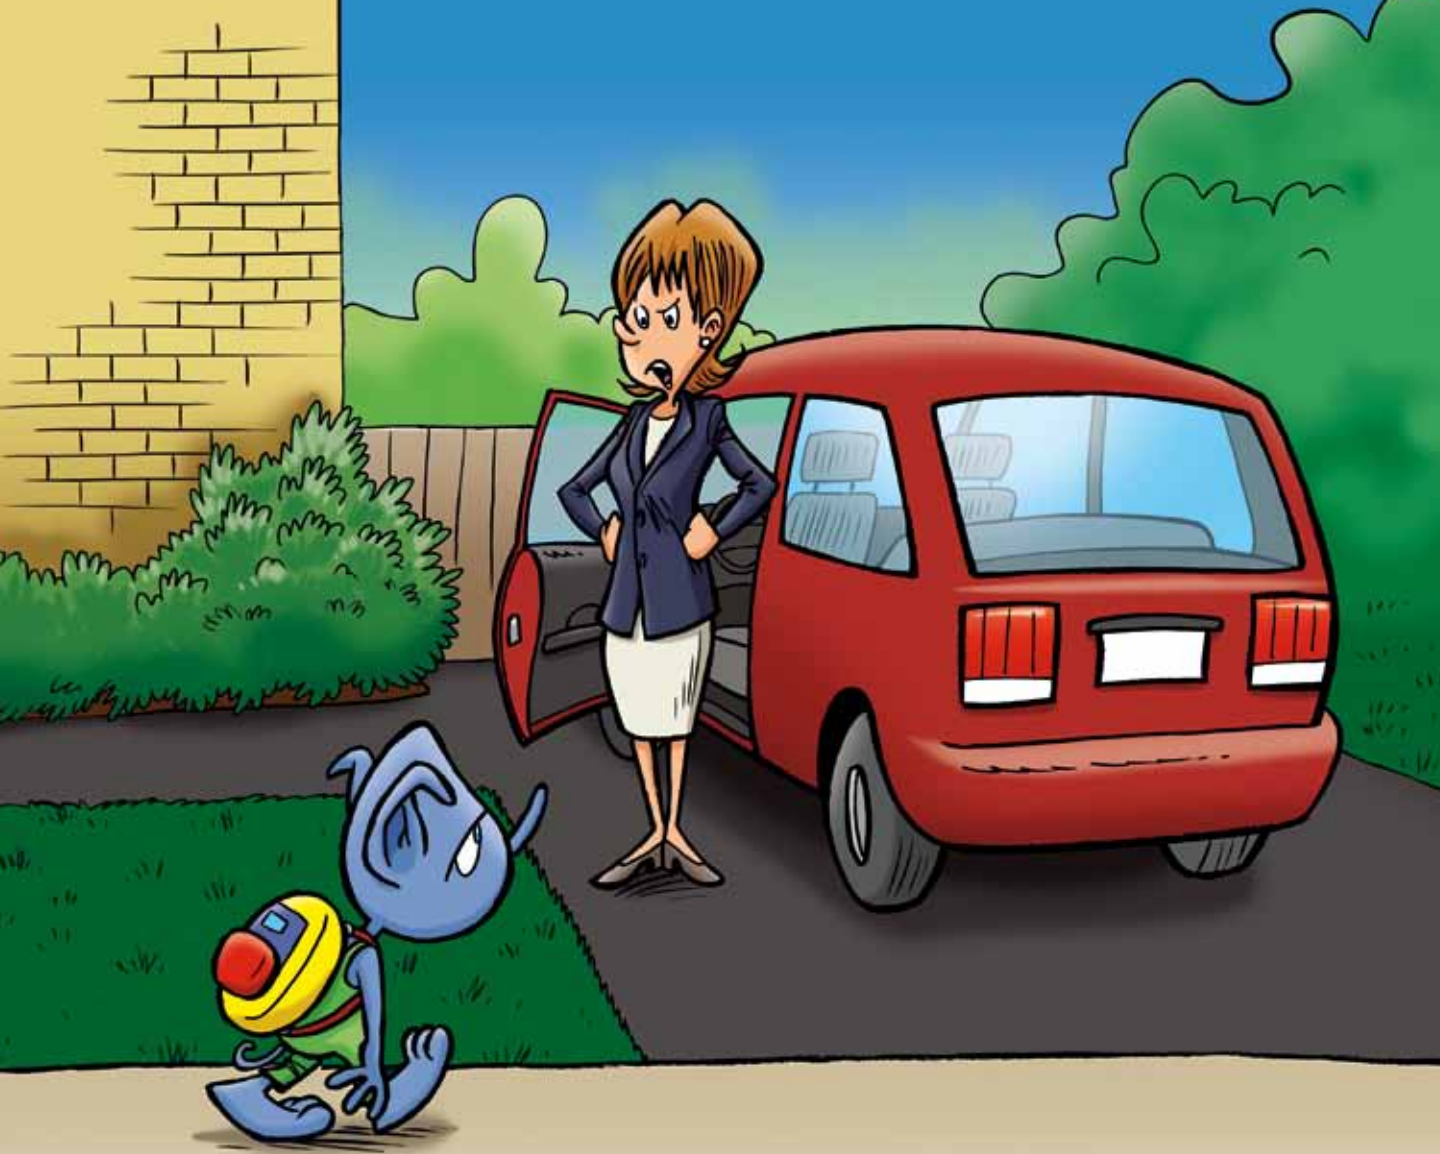

"Children, stay in your seats!" orders the driver, who has not seen Bloop.

What rule should the students have followed?

Turn to page 12 for the answer.

Bloop decides to go back home. Luckily, Mom was just about to get into her car to go to work.

"Bloop, when will you ever learn to get to the bus stop early? Now, I'm going to be late for work because I have to drive you to school," says Mom, annoyed.

The bus arrives at school. Since this is a special day, there are more parents driving, not always in the most orderly manner, near the area reserved for buses.

"Be careful, children!" says the driver.

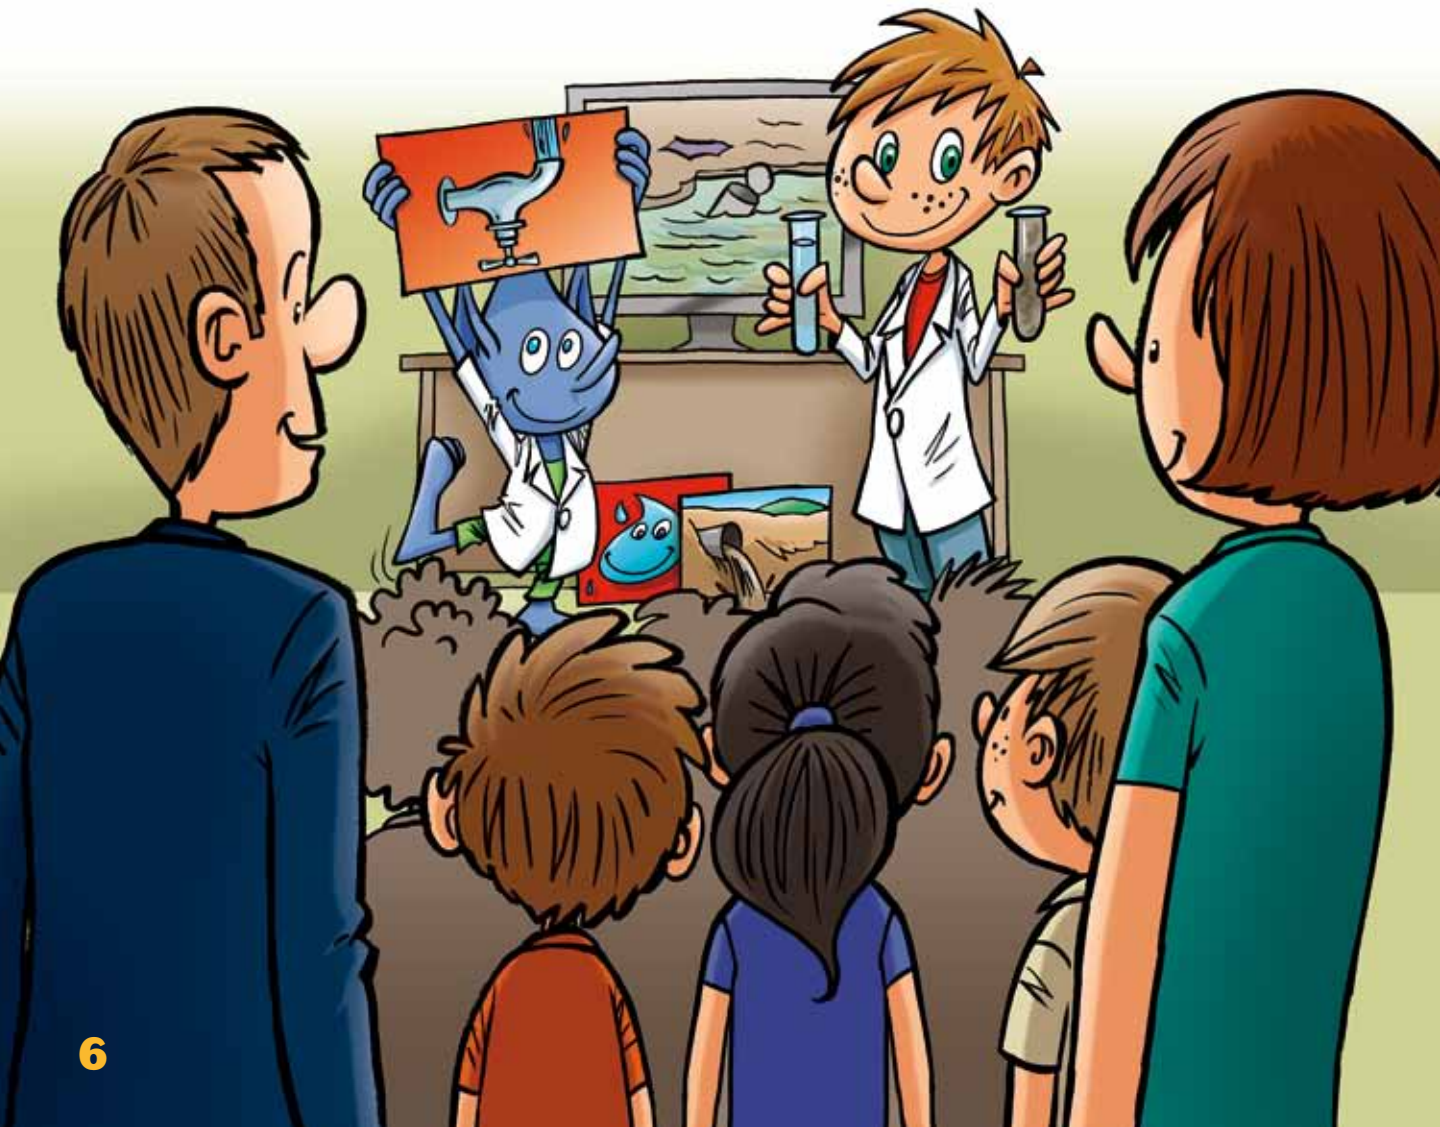

Bloop's mom, who always plans ahead, stops her car at the place designated by the school so that Bloop can get out safely. Even though she is in a hurry, she watches out for the children walking toward the school.

With an enthusiastic wave, Bloop thanks Mom.

ATTENTION! Parents must respect the areas reserved to bus parking.

Sam and Bloop are very well prepared. They look like real scientists. On the computer, a video shows how humans are polluting the water. Sam does experiments with clean water and dirty water. The parents really like his explanations. Bloop's job is to present the charts and coloured drawings that show the polluted rivers, lakes and oceans.

"Water is essential to life. We have to take good care of it," explains Sam to the visitors.

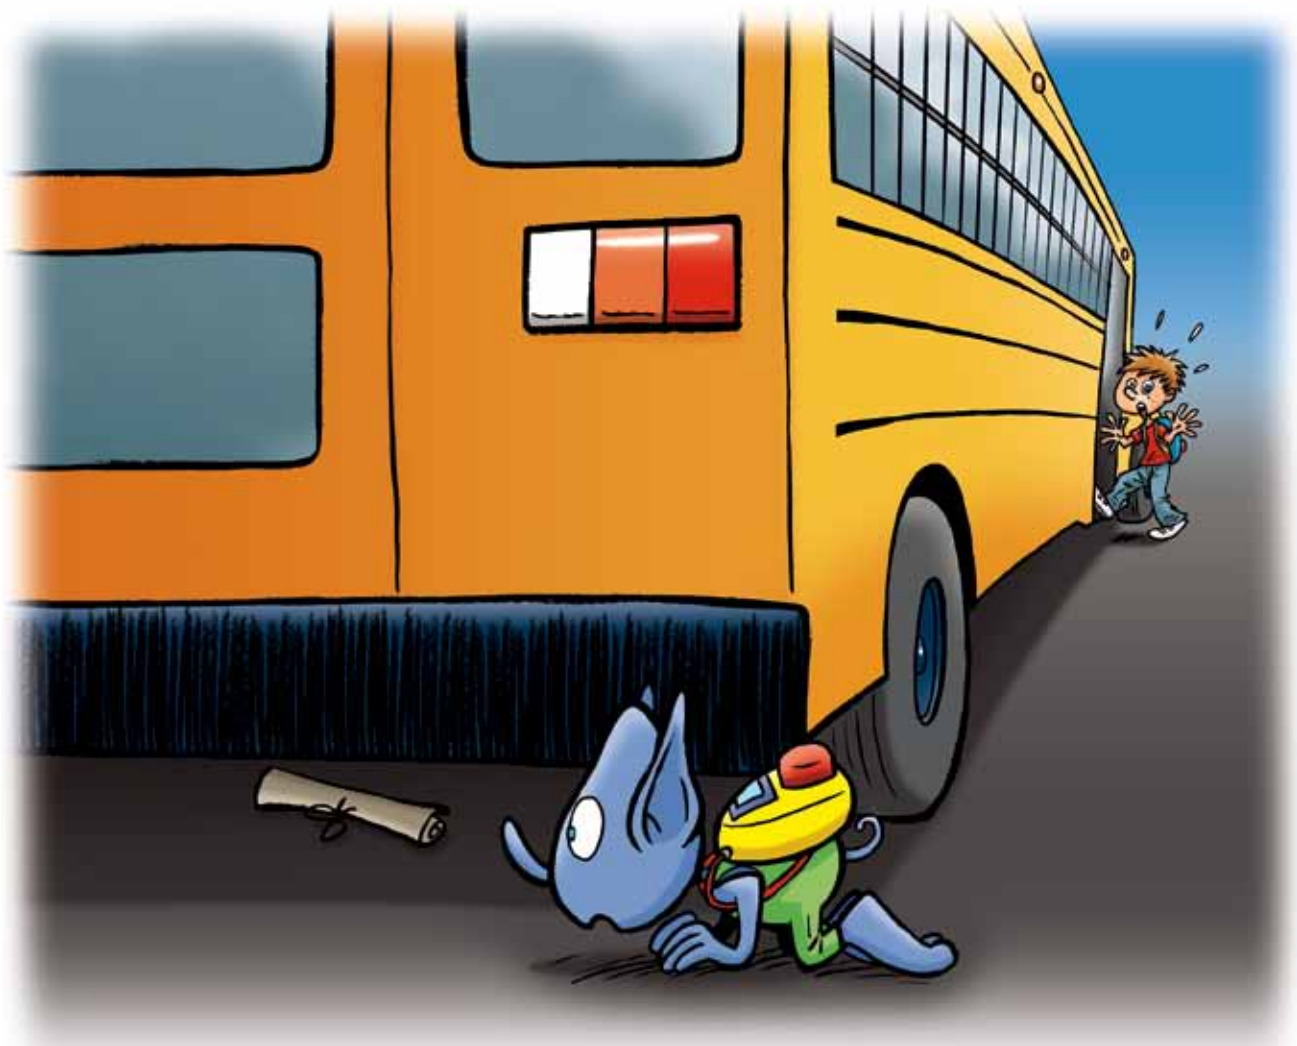

What an exciting day! Sam and Bloop's presentation attracted many visitors. Ms. Labonté, the school principal, has some good news for them.

"The teachers judged the presentations... You won the gold medal! Congratulations!"

Sam and Bloop are very proud. With their gold medals around their necks and certificates in hand, surrounded by the other school children, they are jumping for joy.

It's already over. Happy with how the day went, Sam and Bloop go back to the bus. As he approaches the door, Bloop drops his certificate... which the wind blows under the bus. Bloop reaches out to catch it, but another gust of wind pushes the precious document behind the bus. "Come back here right now, Bloop!" cries Sam. "It's dangerous!"

Scatterbrained Bloop!
What safety rules did he forget?

Turn to page 12 for the answer.

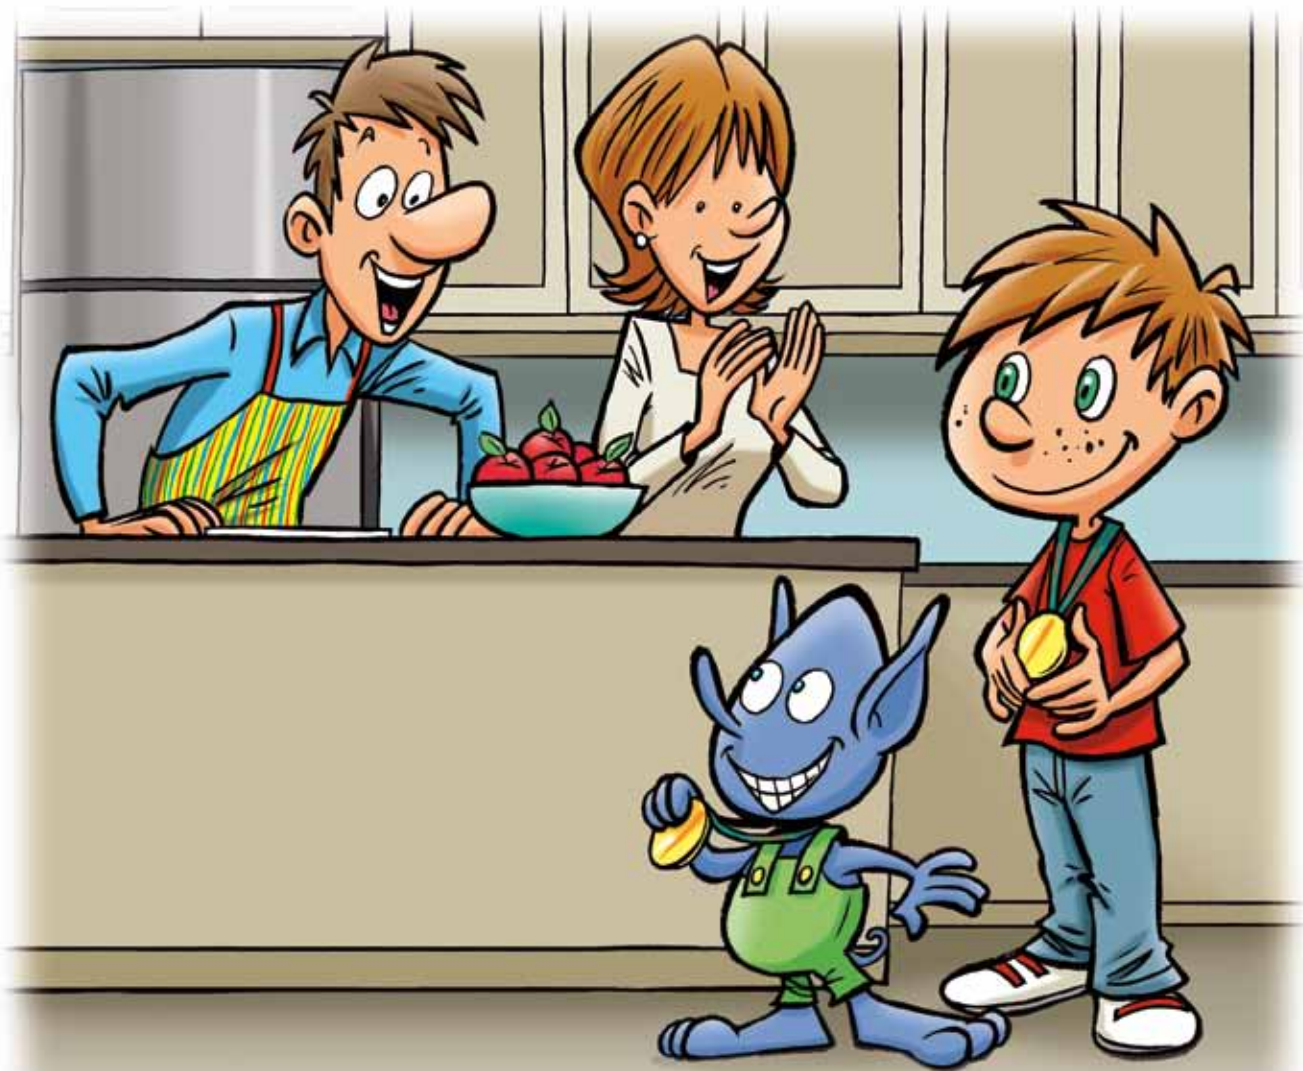

All of the students go to their places in the bus. They are all properly seated. All? Well, not quite... Bloop is in the middle of the aisle, jumping around, showing off his medal to everyone who wants to see it.

"That's enough, Bloop!" insists Sam. "Stop clowning around and sit in your seat." The driver is looking at Bloop in the mirror. He is not at all happy with his passenger's behaviour.

*Once again, Bloop ignored two rules.
Do you know which ones?*

Turn to page 12 for the answer.

Sam and Bloop finally make it home.

"Mom, Dad, look at what we won at school today! The teachers gave us the gold medal!"

But Bloop sure didn't win any medals for being the most careful student...

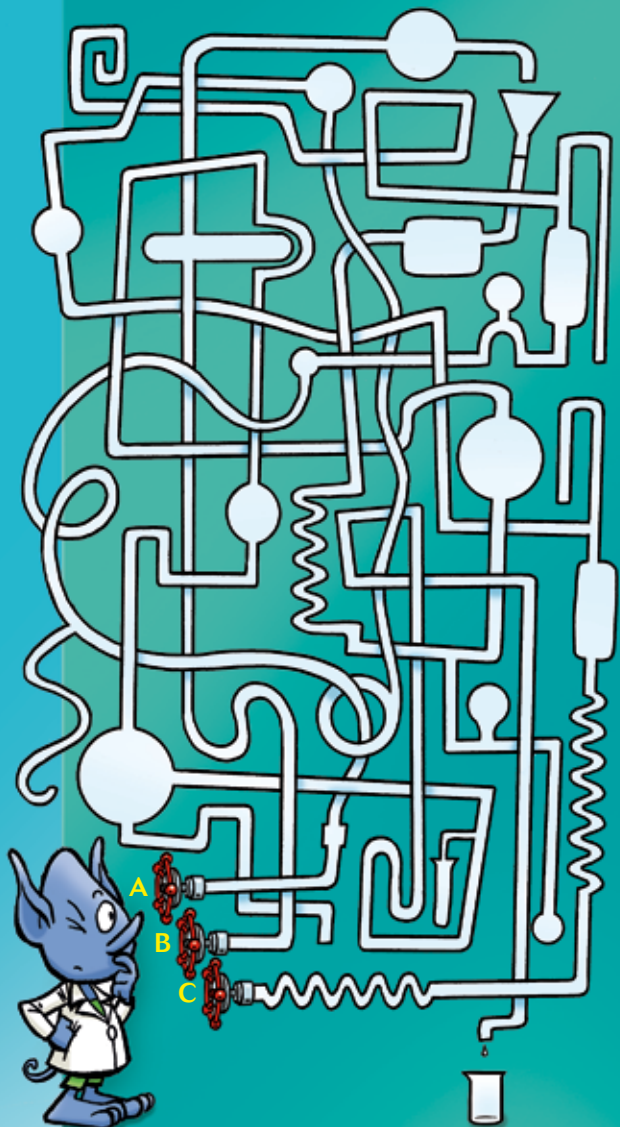

Fun for 10 to 12-year-olds!
