

Definition of a Travel Trailer

A travel trailer is a towable vehicle whose interior is principally set up to serve as a mobile dwelling for recreational purposes.

A travel trailer may be equipped with a load space, in which case it must also satisfy the following additional conditions:

- the livable portion must occupy more than 50% of the available interior floor space (including the space above the coupling system or the space over the wheel wells);
- the vehicle must include two separate doors that open outward, specifically one door that provides access to the livable space and another door that provides access to the load space;
- if, when the vehicle is parked, the load space is used for that purpose and there is a potential risk to the health of the occupants (e.g. various emissions), the vehicle must be equipped with an airtight bulkhead (that may include an airtight door) between the load space and the livable space.

Trailers with a gross vehicle weight rating (GVWR) of 4,500 kg or more may, once the application has been accepted, be authorized to have their licence category changed from a trailer to a recreational travel trailer if they comply with the following requirements:

- the payload is less than 4,500 kg as established by performing the following calculation:
 - $GVWR - Net\ Weight = Payload$
- all of the mandatory equipment listed in the form is present on the trailer and installed in accordance with the standards specified by the equipment's manufacturer:
 - only equipment designed specifically to be installed in a recreational vehicle will be accepted. To find out which equipment can be installed, other than the mandatory equipment, refer to the equipment offered by the major manufacturers of recreational vehicles. Any unusual or unconventional equipment will be refused.

It is important to specify that this definition excludes “tiny homes” or “tiny houses” which are not travel trailers. They are not manufactured for use on the road network and are considered a load on a trailer.

WARNING

Under section 521 of the Highway Safety Code, certain vehicles are subject to periodic mechanical inspections. Travel trailers are excluded from these periodic inspections.

Here are some important details to remember to properly complete your request:

- During the application process and when the Société de l'assurance automobile du Québec (SAAQ) changes the vehicle's registration, the trailer's mechanical inspection certificate must be valid and up to date, otherwise a mechanical inspection will be required:
 - if the mechanical inspection of the vehicle was carried out more than 12 months before the date of the application, a temporary licence plate (transit) will be required for the trailer to be used on a public road in order to undergo a new mechanical inspection.
- The fees to change a vehicle's registration are listed in the “Changes Made During the Validity Period” section of the “Rates and Fines” page on the SAAQ website. These fees are payable by cheque or money order made out to the Société de l'assurance automobile du Québec.

To submit an application to change a vehicle's registration, fill out all of the sections of the Change of Vehicle Registration for a Heavy Trailer to Be Recognized as a Travel Trailer form and enclose the following:

- high-quality colour photographs showing each of the required components in order for the trailer to be recognized as a travel trailer;
- a weight certificate;
- payment of the applicable fees.
